

-Popular events like the Football World Cup and other international sporting occasions are essential in easing international tension and releasing patriotic emotions in a safe way. Do you agree or disagree?

International reputed competitions seem to have a key role in alleviating strains among countries and release of their patriotism safely. I side with this claim as this type of races seem indispensable part of this new challenging era to me.

It is undoubtedly clear that globalization in this ever-changing world is accompanied by conflicts between nations. Political issues are likely to be the root of divergence among numerous countries whereas sport pitches are the grounds where no politician with greedy inclination can instruct rules. Events such as Olympic games and Football World Cup tend to be the sacred lands where bring humankind together, regardless of their color of skin and discrepancy in their religions and beliefs. It is noteworthy thus to assume that the language by which athletes from each community speak with is a language of humanity, friendship and peace devoid of hostility. There have been many occasions, for example, in which a national champion has helped thwarted a tension between two countries, showing that how the nature of sport and the respect associated with it can be deeply felt within individuals' hearts.

Added to the uniformity status that all sportsmen and women have in transnational competitions, a sense of rivalry coupled with patriotism can be observed in both competitors and audience. This attitude might be deemed as enmity between athletes and also fans from various regions, though they rival under specific regulations and laws, allowing them to either rejoice or grieve in a safe manner. Winning a gold medal in an Olympic final match can be exhilarating for the winner while might spark the loser and his nation's grief. The legitimate fact, however, is that both sides concede the result, leading to releasing emotions safely.

In conclusion, in the technology-oriented modern globe where tensions between societies tend to increase, I believe international competitions seem to have an integral share in mitigating this challenge.
